

How to get involved

Australian Paper is currently conducting a $7.5 million feasibility study, supported by the Australian and Victorian Governments, to quantify the benefits of using Energy from Waste (EfW) technology at our Maryvale Mill.

The feasibility study is looking at key aspects of this technology including transport, waste supply and storage, emissions and odour, efficient energy utilisation as well as examining the experience of similar plants already operating in other countries.

The study also examines the environmental, social, technological and commercial aspects of this technology. This includes a detailed preparation of environmental assessments to ensure adherence to Victorian Environment Protection Authority's strict emissions standards.

It will contain all of the work necessary to develop a fully-costed proposal for the design, construction and commissioning of an EfW facility at the Maryvale Mill.

Australian Paper is consulting with the local community and a wide range of parties and interested stakeholders in the Latrobe Valley to ensure a wide range of views are incorporated into the study design and direction. We want the process to be transparent, thorough and inclusive.

The feasibility study is currently underway and is expected to take approximately 12 months. We anticipate it will be completed by June 2018.

We believe this study is an opportunity to support the development of new jobs and skills in the Latrobe Valley while also reducing carbon emissions. An EfW facility would help secure Australian Paper's long-term energy needs so we can deliver sustainable growth for the next generation.

We want to hear your views, to listen to your perspectives, and share our findings and plans with you as they evolve. We encourage you to get involved by:

- Please contact our project team at: creatingenergy@australianpaper.com.au
- To receive regular project updates you can sign up to our mailing list by emailing: creatingenergy@australianpaper.com.au
- To arrange a private tour of the Morwell Energy from Waste information centre, or for larger groups please contact our project team at: creatingenergy@australianpaper.com.au
- Drop by our Energy from Waste information centre which is open every Thursday from 9am to 3pm at 126 George Street Morwell

Australian Government

BUILDING OUR FUTURE

Australian Paper
Maryvale